Piecing It Together

The Puzzle of the First-Generation Identity
Crisis

- Parents, peers, and other role models
- Social Roles
- Harmful Identities
- True Self

The 'Culture Shock' Framework

The Honeymoon Stage

Overwhelmingly Positive

Curious

Idealizing the host
culture

Anticipating new exciting experiences

The Frustration Stage

You start to feel what is different is actually inferior

The host culture is confusing and/or systems are frustrating

May blame your frustrations on the new culture (and its shortcomings) rather than on the adaptation process

The Adjustment Stage

You feel more relaxed and develop a more balanced, objective view of your experience.

The Acceptance Stage

You feel a new sense of belonging and sensitivity to the host culture.

What can we do to help?

Intrusive Advising

Deliberate intensive advising interventions with at-risk students and meeting with them on a regular basis

Support Group

Create an emotional support network with their peers or first-generation students who faced similar experiences.

Assistance

Help them with grant and loan apps, teach them study skills, engage parents, facilitate connections

“First-generation students are some of the most resilient individuals on these college campuses. They are resourceful and when they feel like one door has closed, they find another way to navigate around the barrier.”
